

Shipley: Hunters

Written by Charles Anchor

IT ISN'T LONG BEFORE THE HUNTED BECOMES THE HUNTER...

When a drug smuggling operation goes horribly wrong, Shipley disposes of the millions of dollars of contraband and disappears into seclusion to stay alive.

While on the run, Shipley still finds the enjoyment of surfing the world's oceans so teams up with a band of international jewel smugglers to fund his reclusive travels.

Gallivanting around the world and surfing when he chooses makes life on the run not so bad... that is, until he is seen in Puerto Rico by a member of the mob he is hiding from, who then alerts Shipley's old circles to his existence.

When Shipley's real name is uncovered, the criminal world suddenly tightens around him once again but Shipley is not a man known for backing away from any fight.

Shipley, an alias once for protection, is now a curse...

HOW LONG DO YOU SPEND RESEARCHING A BOOK?

I consider myself having had the gift of an incredibly diverse range of experiences. I've travelled the world, supped with a president's wife, worked alongside good and bad people, slept in luxury and in the rough. People I have met inspire me. My research comes from fifty plus years of personal experience, listening and conversing, along with reading and validating.

WHAT DO YOU FEEL DURING YOUR WRITING PROCESS?

The following is an excerpt from a song I wrote which sums up what I get out of writing.

"Anything my mind wants I know it won't be long before I paint a picture with a song. Painting with notes is what I do. Give an impression or a point of view. Anywhere in the world anytime in space. Any town or girl any pretty face. Speaking foreign language to some people in a Beijing bar. Playing to a million people from a stage, I'm a Super Star. I'm an orphan on the street and I've got nothing to eat but it's all by choice. Or I'm driving to my mansion from my airplane in my new Rolls Royce."
