About the Author:

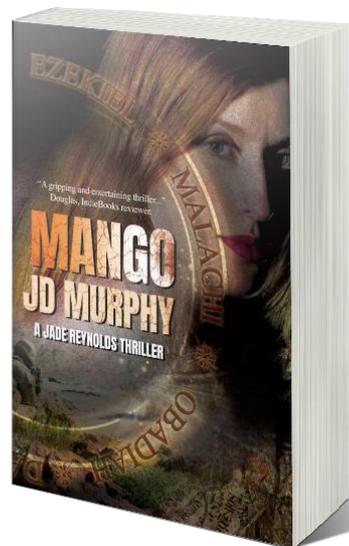

JD MURPHY

JD Murphy is an Australian author, based in Queensland and he often asks, 'What is life without a good yarn?'. His first novel, The Arbor Girls, published in 2020 was considered one of the best first novels released by a new author and received good reception with reviewers and readers around the globe.

JD Murphy's gripping second novel of a contemporary setting examines the clashes possible between the cultures and faiths inherent in a freedom focused nation such as Australia. It is, above all, created to entertain readers. JD Murphy trusts that they will be wholesomely entertained by yet another acclaimed yarn.

A Conversation with JD

What were your inspirations for Mango?

The concept of Detective Jade Reynolds was well formed in my subconscious before it 'surfaced'. In the novel, I have explored various personal relationships which seem, to the mainstream, to be on a fringe. In fact, the fringe dwellers in my novel are the mainstream. There are also broad-brush explorations of various religious doctrines.

Include any interesting experiences you might've had during the research for the book, or while writing the book:

I delved into court documents and peer published reviews of the notorious period of the Queensland Police Service as occurred during the 'Joh Bjelke Peterson' era.

How did you decide on the characters in the book would also be an interesting concept to include?

Detectives deal with the tragedy of criminality. It is the lot of the law enforcement professional to understand the criminal mind without indulging in criminality themselves. I believe that most detectives have, at some time, slipped a little onto the dark side. It is an imperfection of the human condition.

What drew you to the subject matter or the characters?

Producing an appealing detective thriller is a task I have aspired to.

For whom did you write it and why?

Those who would like to read a contemporary detective thriller set in familiar locations in Australia.
