ABOUT THE AUTHOR

B.J. Toniolo (To-nee-olo) grew up in Melbourne's north-western suburbs, living there the majority of his life, apart from a two-year stint in London. He has been a working podiatrist for over a decade and runs his own business, a nod to his love of health and wellness. He is a mad Brisbane Lions supporter and an avid cricket fan. He has always enjoyed writing ever since he was young, whereas poetry and a love of reading came in adult life. It wasn't until he was afforded the opportunity of time that he turned his hand to novel writing. Armed with a dream of being published one day, he began writing Here's to Sweet Revenge.

A CONVERSATION WITH THE AUTHOR

WHERE DID YOU GET THE INSPIRATION FOR 'HERE'S TO SWEET REVENGE'?

The idea for this book came from the album cover for "Three Cheers to Sweet Revenge". It depicts two people staring at each other, splattered with blood. I always loved the cover of that album and from there the idea was born. I wondered what would happen if you loved someone and they were taken away from you. From there, the idea grew.

WHEN DID YOU FIRST REALISE YOU WANTED TO WRITE?

I used to love creating writing at primary school. In high school I realised that I had a talent for writing, but never really had any ambitions. I had the idea to write a novel in university, but never did anything about it. It wasn't until I became an avid reader in my late twenties and began writing in journals and appreciating the written word that I thought I'd love to write a novel one day.

WHAT ARE YOUR PLANS FOR FUTURE BOOKS?

I am currently writing another that I'd love to have published which talks about Australia and the wars. I love German war history, so I'd eventually love to write a book about that.
